To celebrate the launch of the song, DETROIT DREAMERS made a special appearance today, Sept. 17, to perform "Dreamers" for employees at the Mack Assembly Plant in Detroit. "Dreamers" is available now on all digital platforms.

"Music, architecture and the automotive industry are revered in the city of Detroit," said Olivier Francois, Global Chief Marketing Officer, Stellantis. "This initiative with Wallace Detroit Guitars and DETROIT DREAMERS to launch a custom Jeep-branded guitar and custom track gives fans the opportunity to own a unique and authentic work of art that both acknowledges their passion for the Jeep brand and celebrates the city's history of music and its automotive roots."

DETROIT DREAMERS founder Martin Kierszenbaum adds, "Growing up in Michigan, the people around us, many in the automobile industry, had a profound effect on Tony and me. We watched Jeep remain bold and ever ready to collaborate with adventurous musicians. With its approach to re-purposing local material, Wallace Detroit Guitars is the embodiment of Detroit ingenuity and resilience. It's an honor to be wielding a guitar forged by both of those companies so deeply rooted in the community that shaped us."

"Detroit is full of people who know how to make things. Wallace Guitars

Wallace Detroit Guitar bodies are built entirely from ethically sourced old-growth wood sourced from historic abandoned buildings in Detroit. The refurbished wood, usually over 100 years old, gives each custom piece a vintage sound only available in older instruments. And the thoughtful combination of neck, pickups, and electronics provide a wide range of tone with great sustain. The guitar bodies are cut on a CNC router and finished by hand. Each body is completely unique in its color and grain pattern. Wherever possible, historic stains, nail holes and scars are left in the wood to showcase its history.
